EDP community campaign launched to help vulnerable during coronavirus crisis

The fightback against coronavirus starts here – and it is all about killing it with kindness.

Today we join forces with Norfolk County Council to launch our Here to Help campaign – to create an army of helpers to offer support to those in need.

As Prime Minister Boris Johnson urged people to avoid public places and unnecessary social contact, our campaign aims to reach vulnerable and lonely people who are left isolated.

It may be dropping off food, walking a pet or phoning someone on their own – or it could be businesses doing home deliveries. We've included a Here to Help postcard to post through your neighbours' letterboxes.

EDP and Evening News editor David Powles said: "There will be a lot of uncertainty over the coming months, but if we pull together we can do our best to ensure everyone is supported."
